The Prized Collectibles of Football

By Robert Reed

It has taken a while, but sports memorabilia collectors who once thought of only one sport, are now thinking twice about football.

The stuff of Notre Dame, Johnny Unitas, the Dallas Cowboys, and most anything related to football in the 1940s, is steadily being sought out.

Football got a start on the college campus shortly after the Civil War but didn't reach a fully professional level until the 20th century. Fans knew it was here to stay in 1897 when Reverend John Bigham wrote that football was a "game of so much service as to render it legitimate, valuable, and necessary equipment in all our higher institutions."

The literary works of 19th century football coach and journalist Walter Camp are highly prized today. Camp, who played on the 1876 Yale team, eventually authored a number of books including Walter Camp's Book of College Sports, in 1889, American Football, in 1891, and Football Facts and Figures, 1894. All are highly collectible today.

College football was so popular in the 1890s that several companies produced board games in the name of the pastime. The George Childs Company offered The Game of Football, complete with wooden bench, team cards, and spinner. The McLoughlin Brothers Company, meanwhile, sold the Yale-Princeton Football

Game, which was similarly designed.

Unlike some collectibles, "The age of an item has less effect on value than its history," notes William Ketchum the author of Sports Collectibles for Fun and Profit. "A 19th century helmet of unknown origin is not nearly as valuable as a more recent one worn by Jim Brown."

Dime novel, Argosy Weekly, with cover story of Touchdown Broadway, November 1939.

"Generally the quantities and types of football memorabilia are more limited than baseball," adds Ketchum, "with the exception of equipment."

Like baseball, the major manufacturers of football equipment in the past included Wilson, Rawlings, and Spalding. Spalding even produced a pocket-sized football guidebook from the 1880s to the 1930s, a prized collectible now.

Unlike baseball, football cards did not emerge until the 1930s. In 1933 Goudey issued Sports Kings which included football greats Red Grange, Jim Thorpe, and Knute Rockne, but also featured other sports figures. National Chicle offered the first full major football set in 1935.

Currently, a full Chicle set would be worth thousands. Individuals whose cards are highly sought include Bobby Layne, Johnny Unitas, and Joe Namath. A full 1965 Topps set, which also includes the card of player turned White House cabinet member, Jack Kemp, could bring more than $2,000 depending on condition.

Paper items can have strong appeal in the area of football collectibles. A 1912 Notre Dame yearbook, including pictures from Knute Rockne's sophomore year, brought nearly $1,500 at a major auction in recent years. At the same auction, a color-tinted photograph used in Sports History Magazine of the 1939 Iowa Hawkeyes brought $350. It was framed, matted, and signed by artist Brenda Cole.

Regular football game programs, guides, and annuals of both college and professional teams of the 1920s and 1930s are at a premium to-

A blackball box and marbles used in Ohio in the early 1900s was auctioned for $500. The box had machine-made dovetailing and was decorated with decoupage prints in painted frames.

Blackball Boxes

By Terry and Kim Kovel

As early as the 17th century in America, members of fraternal clubs often voted at their meetings without paper ballots. Many decisions had to be almost unanimous; just one "no" vote could defeat a project. So, they used a blackball box instead of paper ballots. Each person was given a random number of black and white marbles. To vote no, a black marble was dropped in the box. The box had a board that covered the voter's hand and marble so that no one could see the vote. Each marble made a noise when it was dropped, so only one marble could be used. When the box was opened, it was easy for everyone to see the number of black marbles and if the project, motion or request for membership had passed or failed. It was impossible to tell who had used a black marble. The term "blackballed" is still in use, and the box was saved as part of history. The rules are still in "Robert's Rules of Order," a guide to parliamentary procedure, but there are few times when only one vote, not a majority, is needed to make a decision. An old blackball box used by the Odd Fellows fraternal order was sold at auction recently for $500.

 day. Likewise, tickets, newspapers, and pennants prior to the 1950s are in demand, especially if they related to a major football event such as a professional championship or the Rose Bowl.

Old pin-back football buttons are nice too, but may be hard to find.

"Football players did not enjoy the same button popularity as their baseball counterparts in the early days," according to Ted Hake and Russ King, the co-authors of Collectible Pin-Back Buttons.

However, "Football series buttons have increased in recent decades with the growth of televised professional football. Early football buttons picturing an individual player at any level of competition are quite scarce."

There is a whole field of souvenirs associated with the professional teams, and some of it can be of major interest to collectors. From a 1967 nodder depicting a Green Bay Packer to Celluloid football dolls, originally attached to a stick, sold before games and during half-time in the 1940s.

A general rule on football uniforms and other equipment is that pre-1960s material is sought, and more recent material has value if it is connected directly to a player. Several years ago, a New York City auction gallery sold the 1984 Seattle Seahawks jersey of Franco Harris for more than $500.

Football collectibles make up well less than ten percent of sports memorabilia market according to Business Week.

TIP: If your tea caddy or knife box has a silver or brass keyhole, don't use a metal cleaner. The cleaner will damage the wood.

65th Shenandoah Antiques Expo: All About Family

At the end of 2018, after sponsoring 63 shows Heritage Promotions and the Shenandoah Antiques Expo internally transformed itself from a long-standing partnership with Sam and Mary Ferguson to a true family operation. Ray and Martha's daughter, Lesley, became officially invested as a full-fledged partner. Having worked many, maybe even most (depends on who you ask), of the 63 shows, she was a seasoned veteran stepping in comfortably and "hitting the decks running." Other than Mother Nature tossing in the threat of a thunderstorm on Saturday, the Shenandoah the 64th show last May ran like clockwork. Yet Lesley's official engagement in the business is only part of the story. Yes, she's part of the Stokes' family. But the Shenandoah Antiques Expo has, over the years, evolved into a much larger and devoted family – making for an expansive family affair. Just who makes up this family?

Well, first things first – if you've never attended this amazing, long-running show, you have truly missed one of the most exciting and diverse antique and collectibles shopping experiences in the mid-Atlantic area, even the entire eastern seaboard. What makes the show so special are the people. Over the period of 64 events, there have been thousands of dealers that have participated in the shows. What makes this "family" is that several hundred of the thousand or so vendors participated at some of the shows as far back as the early 90s – and they return every year in May and October. They come not only because they know what a great show it is and they always have had success at selling their wares, but they come to be with the Shenandoah Expo family. They talk about shows they've done – good and bad; about amazing deals they've found; and they share stories and get caught up on the kids and grandkids. And, they refer customers to their fellow dealers – a bit like Miracle on 34th Street. But the family doesn't stop there. No, the family further expands to include the dedicated, loyal customers. And some customers "cross-over" to being dealers. It happens!

Just like the dealers, there are customers that have been to 10, 20, 30 or more shows over the years. They are loyal not only to the show. They know Ray and Martha, many on a first name basis, and they know the commitment the Stokes' have in putting on a great show. They come to see the dealers with whom they've established a long-running relationship. Some have communicated to favorite dealers with their "in-seek-of" want list in advance, hoping one of their connections might arrive with that special treasure. They come to see new dealers and what they've brought to sell. And they come to just enjoy all that the show has to offer – fun, excitement, getting "juiced" in bargaining and hopefully taking home that special piece for their home or as a gift.

And now, with 64 shows "in the books" and preparations underway for the 65th edition of this antiques extravaganza, Heritage Promotions is tapping their archives to reach out to vendors of both past and recent shows to bring the best possible diversity of antiques and collectibles to the Expo. One long-time customer said that, "once you come to one of the shows, you are hooked and you can't wait for the next one!" One dealer noted that the Shenandoah Antiques Expo has "most any antiques you can think of." Whether you are looking for 18th- and 19th-century American and English furniture, vintage Americana, mid-century modern, jewelry, silver, rugs, art or just about any type of collectible, he said, "There truly is a treasure just waiting to be found by any and all who attend." So don't miss the 65th show. Ray and Martha invite you to "Come join the family!"

The 65th Shenandoah Antiques Expo will be held at the Augusta Expoland, 277 Expo Rd, Fishersville, VA. It will be open Friday and Saturday, Oct 11 and 12 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is $10 per person on Friday (early shopping and two day pass) and $5 per person on Saturday. ## QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

By Terry and Kim Kovel

Q. I found a plate marked "Knickerbocker Vitrified China No. 28" in the woods outside of Trenton, New Jersey. The plate is white with a brown tulip in the center, a blue ring and clover border. Can you tell me how old it is?

A. Knickerbocker is a pattern made by Noritake from 1985 to 1987. Noritake porcelain was made in Japan by Nippon Toki Kaisha beginning in 1904. The company is still in business. Knickerbocker plates sell online for less than $10.

Q. I have a light bulb that I have identified as an 1885 Heisler-Bernstein incandescent lamp. Does it have any value? And if so, where would I find a buyer for such a bulb?

A. Antique and vintage light bulbs are classified as "early technology," an area of collecting that includes electrical apparatus, astronomical devices and medical instruments. Artificial lighting is significant, since its beginning in the 1880s marked the lengthening of the workday and other changes. Yes, there are collectors who hunt for early incandescent light bulbs, especially early carbon filament ones from the 1880s to early 1900s with intact filaments. Some early bulbs bring high prices; a few have sold for over $5,000. Charles Heisler and Alexander Bernstein both owned businesses in the 1880s and early 1900s that developed bulbs and lamps. Their work was influential in making electric lighting practical and popular. Look for an auction house that specializes in early technology. The website www.bulb-collector.com also has information.

Q. I have a piece of antique dental equipment that I can't find out much about. The nameplate on it says "Perfection Casting Machine, The Cleveland Dental Mfg. Co." The patent date is Aug. 22, 1916, and the serial number is 37682. Any information or a point in the right direction would be greatly appreciated.

A. The Cleveland Dental Mfg. Co. was founded in Cleveland in 1893. The company sold dental equipment and supplies. This casting machine was bolted or screwed onto a tabletop and used to mold dental crowns. It isn't possible to know the date this machine was made without a list of serial numbers used by the company, but the patent date gives a clue. It was probably made between 1916 and about 1930. The factory is no longer in existence. The casting machine might appeal to collectors of old dental instruments or to someone who makes jewelry. The rarely seen machines sell online for about $50.

Back to School Display at the Grist Mill Center

Holiday Mash-Up at Haddon Heights Antiques Center

What do Christmas, Valentine's Day, the Fourth of July, and Halloween all have in common? Why, they're all holidays, of course, and all holidays are what you'll find represented in the latest special display at the Haddon Heights Antiques Center. Whether you collect one particular holiday or collect them all, this display is for you.

This "Holiday Mash-up" will include examples of decorations for as many major holidays as possible. Of course, you can expect to see Christmas well-represented with Santa Clauses, ceramic trees, glass ornaments, and snowmen abounding. And Halloween ghosts and jack o'lanterns and witches will be in plentiful supply, too.

Dealers will be scouring their stock to come up with Thanksgiving turkeys and Pilgrims, Valentine hearts, St. Patrick's Day leprechauns, Easter chicks and bunnies, and patriotic Fourth of July symbols.

September is a great time to check out the Haddon Heights Antiques Center and its latest colorful, eye-catching display. Two floors are packed with vintage treasures, so you're bound to find something to add to or perhaps inspire a collection.

This multi-dealer shop is located on Clements Bridge Road, just off I-295 and the White Horse Pike, where Barrington and Haddon Heights meet at the railroad tracks. The Haddon Heights Antiques Center is open seven days a week from 10 to 5 with extended hours on Fridays. Call 856-546-0555 for directions or more information.
